

CONTENTS

Chapter	Title	Pages
1	Introduction of human resource management	2
2	Strategic HRM	5
3	Delivering HRM systems and roles	11
4	Knowledge management	18
5	The ethical dimension of HRM	24
6	Organizational behavior	30
7	Human Resource Planning in LGO.	35
8	Work, organization and job design	39
9	Learning and development	46
10	Development and Career Planning	54
11	Performance management	61
12	Evaluating and Rewarding Employees	66
13	Motivation	73
14	Commitment and Employee engagement	79
15	Employee relations	87

Chapter 1¹

Introduction of human resource management

1.1 Introduction

Strategic human resource management (strategic HRM or SHRM) is an approach to the development and implementation of HR strategies that are integrated with business strategies and support their achievement. SHRM has been described by Boxall (1996) as the interface between HRM and strategic management. Schuler and Jackson (2007: 5) stated that SHRM is fundamentally about 'systematically linking people with the firm'.

Baird and Meshoulam (1988: 116) pointed out that: 'Business objectives are accomplished when human resource practices, procedures and systems are developed and implemented based on organizational needs, that is, when a strategic perspective to human resource management is adopted.' Wright and McMahan (1992: 295) explained that the field of HRM has 'sought to become integrated with the strategic management process through the development of a new discipline referred to as strategic human resource management'.

In essence, strategic HRM is conceptual; it is a general notion of how integration or 'fit' between HR and business strategies is achieved, the benefits of taking a longer-term view of where HR should be going and how to get there, and how coherent and mutually supporting HR strategies should be developed and implemented. Importantly, it is also about how members of the HR function should adopt a strategic approach on a day-to-day basis. This means that they operate as part of the management team, ensure that HR activities support the achievement of business strategies on a continuous basis and add value.

The aim of this chapter is to explore what this involves. It starts with an analysis of the meaning of SHRM. It then covers: an examination of its nature and its aims; an analysis of its underpinning concepts the resource-based view and strategic fit. This is followed by a description of how strategic HRM works, namely the universalistic, contingency and configurational perspectives defined by Delery and Doty (1996) and the three approaches associated with those perspectives – best practice, best fit and bundling. The chapter continues with a summary of the distinctive features of strategic HRM and ends with an examination of how HR strategies are developed and implemented when an SHRM approach is adopted.

¹ Armstrong, M. (2014). Armstrong's handbook of human resource management practice (11th ed.). London: Kogan Page.

1.2 The conceptual basis of strategic HRM

Strategic HRM takes the notion of HRM as a strategic, integrated and coherent process and associates it with an approach to management that involves adopting a broad and long-term view of where the business is going and managing it in ways that ensure that this strategic thrust is maintained. It is influenced by the concepts of strategic management and strategy.

1.2.1 Strategic management

According to Boxall and Purcell (2003: 44): 'Strategic management is best defined as a process. It is a process of strategy making, of forming and, if the firm survives, reforming its strategy over time.' Strategic management was described by Johnson et al (2005: 6) as 'understanding the strategic position of an organization, making strategic choices for the future, and turning strategy into action'. The purpose of strategic management has been expressed by Kanter (1984: 288) as being to 'elicit the present actions for the future' and become 'action vehicles – integrating and institutionalizing mechanisms for change' (ibid: 301).

The key strategic management activity identified by Thompson and Strickland (1996: 3) is 'deciding what business the company will be in and forming a strategic vision of where the organization needs to be headed in effect, infusing the organization with a sense of purpose, providing long-term direction, and establishing a clear mission to be accomplished.'

The focus is on identifying the organization's mission and strategies, but attention is also given to the resource base required to make it succeed. Managers who think strategically will have a broad and long-term view of where they are going. But they will also be aware that they are responsible, first, for planning how to allocate resources to opportunities that contribute to the implementation of strategy, and second, for managing these opportunities in ways that will add value to the results achieved by the firm.

1.2.2 The concept of strategy

Strategy is the approach selected to achieve specified goals in the future. As defined by Chandler (1962: 13) it is: 'The determination of the long-term goals and objectives of an enterprise, and the adoption of courses of action and the allocation of resources necessary for carrying out those goals.' The formulation and implementation of corporate strategy is a process for developing a sense of direction, making the best use of resources and ensuring strategic fit.

Strategy has three fundamental characteristics. First, it is forward looking. It is about deciding where you want to go and how you mean to get there. It is concerned with both ends and means. In this sense a strategy is a declaration of intent: 'This is what we want to do and this is how we intend to do it.' Strategies define longer-term goals but they also cover how those goals will be attained. They guide purposeful action to deliver the required result. A good strategy is one that works, one that in Abell's (1993: 1) phrase enables organizations to adapt by 'mastering the present and pre-empting the future'. As Boxall (1996: 70) explained: 'Strategy should be understood as a framework of critical ends and means.'

The second characteristic of strategy is the recognition that the organizational capability of a firm (its capacity to function effectively) depends on its resource capability (the quality and quantity of its resources and their potential to deliver results). This is the resource-based view as described later in this chapter.

The third characteristic of strategy is that it aims to achieve strategic fit – the need when developing functional strategies such as HR to achieve congruence between them and the organization's business strategies within the context of its external and internal environment.